Treating and Assessing Sexual Offenders: Methods and Outcomes

This workshop will describe and evaluate the Rockwood Psychological Services approach to assessing and treating sexual offenders.

Rockwood currently delivers programs for sexual offenders in a provincial facility for psychiatrically disordered offenders and two federal Canadian prisons. Rockwood has designed and delivered motivational preparatory, regular, categorical denier, maintenance sexual offender programs, specialized programs for intellectually disabled and developmentally delayed sexual offenders, and a community-based program for juvenile sexual offenders. The methods, including therapeutic process and phases of treatment, and theoretical orientation, including positive psychology, of the Rockwood programs will be reviewed. Most of these programs have been evaluated in terms of both the targets of treatment and recidivism, and these outcomes will be described. The second part of the workshop explores Marshall's latest research on dynamic risk factors associated with recidivism in sexual offenders, such as sexual preoccupation/addiction, shame and guilt, schema, and aging and sexual offending.

Liam E. Marshall

Liam has been conducting research on and treating sexual offenders for more than fourteen years. He has delivered trainings for correctional services and those who work with sexual and violent offenders in fourteen countries. Liam has many publications including a co-edited-, and two co-authored-books. He is on the editorial board of the journals Sexual Aggression and Sexual Addiction and Compulsivity and is a periodic reviewer for Sexual Abuse and Sexual Medicine. Liam has helped develop and been a therapist for preparatory, regular, maintenance, deniers, and low-functioning sexual offender treatment programs, and for anger management and domestic violence programs. He is currently the research director for Rockwood Psychological Services and research chair and co-supervisor of treatment programs at a secure treatment unit for incarcerated seriously psychiatrically disordered offenders.
